

Ken Kroeger

Founder HealthCube and Catalyst Interactive

Ken Kroeger is one of the founders of HealthCube, an Australian health services and technology company and of Catalyst Interactive, an internationally recognised supplier of technology based training and simulation systems.

A long career in business and computing has provided Ken with insight into diverse industry sectors and technologies. Prior to moving to Australia, Ken worked with Canada's federal government, the Canadian Royal Mounted Police and Southam News where he enjoyed roles in research and development, evaluating emerging technology and the design and implementation of new business, manufacturing and aviation related systems.

Ken currently serves on the board of directors for HealthCube and consults to both entrepreneurial firms and multinational organisations.

He is a keen, long time, competitive cyclist and spends his spare time with his young family or riding Canberra's surrounding roads and trails.

Ken studied business and systems analysis at Carleton University and the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology.
